Master of Arts in History

The Master of Arts in History program provides a collaborative and supportive environment where you have an opportunity to study and work alongside faculty on meaningful research projects.

Our dynamic and award-winning faculty will provide you with one-on-one mentorship in areas that include the history of colonialism and genocide, Indigenous and community history, oral history, food and agricultural history, historical geography, collective memory, Christianity, foreign relations and politics, military history, and the histories of gender and sexuality.

We offer an exceptionally well-rounded educational experience that combines small and engaging seminars with broad field courses and specialized research opportunities.

Why Nipissing?

- At Nipissing, we carefully match our students with professors who have similar interests and expertise.
- Our high faculty-to-student ratio assures that you receive the kind of individualized attention only small programs can provide.
- Our annual Graduate Research Conference offers you an opportunity to present your research and receive feedback from faculty and community members.
- We offer competitive funding packages that give you practical experience working and researching in an academic environment.
- The graduate experience at Nipissing revolves around the Centre for the Study of State Violence. This newly opened research hub hosts all graduate seminars, houses a small library collection, and provides space for students to work. A computer lab and soundproof interview room are available for student research projects, and the gaming and movie room allows for both academic and social events.

Where Can I Go After Graduation?

Our Master of Arts in History graduates have taken various career paths after graduation. These include positions that require advanced research and communication skills in politics, heritage and museums, media, the environment, law, the not-for-profit sector, and government service. Others continue to careers as educators or pursue further study at the doctoral level.
